

No. 23-74

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

DEBRA A. VITAGLIANO, Petitioner,
v.
COUNTY OF WESTCHESTER, NEW YORK,
Respondent.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

BRIEF OF AMICUS CURIAE
STUDENTS FOR LIFE OF AMERICA
IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

ZACHARY KESTER
General Counsel
STUDENTS FOR LIFE
OF AMERICA
1000 Winchester Street
Suite 301
Fredericksburg, VA 22401
(463) 229-0240
zkester@studentsforlife.org

WILLIAM BOCK, III
Counsel of Record
KROGER GARDIS AND REGAS, LLP
111 Monument Circle
Suite 900
Indianapolis, IN 46204
(317) 777-7412
wbock@kgrlaw.com

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

August 24, 2023

CERTIFICATE OF INTERESTED PERSONS

The case number here is No. 23-74, Debra A. Vitagliano v. County of Westchester, New York.

The undersigned counsel of record certifies that—in addition to the persons and entities listed in the Certificate of Interested Persons filed by appellants, appellees, and the other amici—the following listed persons and entities have an interest in the outcome of this case. These representations are made in order that the judges of this court may evaluate possible disqualification or recusal:

Students for Life of America
William Bock, III
Zachary Kester

Students for Life is a 501(c)(3) charity which does not issue stock, has no parent corporation, in which no person or entity has an ownership interest of 10%.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

CERTIFICATE OF INTERESTED PERSONS..... i

TABLE OF CONTENTS ii

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES.....iii

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE..... 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 2

ARGUMENT..... 3

I. This Court should overrule its decision in Hill v. Colorado because its rationale has been superseded. 3

A. This Court’s First Amendment jurisprudence since Hill has undermined its reasoning..... 3

 1. Reed v. Town of Gilbert shows that the Westchester ordinance is a content-based restriction on speech..... 4

 2. Matal v. Tam shows that the Westchester ordinance mandates unconstitutional viewpoint discrimination. 6

 3. This Court should revisit its conclusions that the Colorado law in Hill and the Massachusetts law in McCullen are content and viewpoint neutral. 7

B. The Hill Court’s balancing of interests has been superseded by McCullen. 10

C. The Westchester ordinance is not narrowly tailored..... 13

II. Stare decisis does not require this Court to adhere to Hill..... 15

CONCLUSION 17

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Agostini v. Felton , 521 U.S. 203 (1997)	16
Bruni v. City of Pittsburgh , 283 F. Supp. 357 (W.D. Pa. 2017).....	16
Hill v. Colorado , 530 U.S. 703 (2000)	1, 3, 8, 9, 11, 13, 15
Janus v. AFSCME , 138 S. Ct. 2448 (2018)	16
Madsen v. Women’s Health Center , 512 U.S. 753 (1994)	10
Matal v. Tam , 137 S. Ct. 1744 (2017)	2, 4, 6, 7, 9, 10
McCullen v. Coakley , 134 S. Ct. (2014) ..	1, 2, 5, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16
Minnesota Voters Alliance v. Mansky , 138 S. Ct. 1876 (2018)	9, 14, 15
NAACP v. Button , 371 U.S. 415 (1963)	13
Pearson v. Callahan , 555 U.S. 223 (2009)	16
Reed v. Town of Gilbert , 135 S. Ct. 2281 (2015)	1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9
Snyder v. Phelps , 562 U.S. 443 (2011)	9
Street v. New York , 394 U.S. (1969)	10
Ward v. Rock Against Racism , 491 U.S. 781 (1989)	5

Statutes

15 U.S.C. § 1052(a) 4, 5
Reproductive Health Care Facilities Access Act Laws of Westchester County §§425 et seq 13, 14

Rules

Sup. Ct. R. 37 1
Sup. Ct. R. 37.2(a) 1
Sup. Ct. R. 37.6 1

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE¹

Students for Life of America (“SFLA”) exists to recruit, train, and mobilize the pro-life generation to abolish abortion. It launches and supports Students for Life groups in colleges, high schools, middle schools, law schools, and medical schools throughout the nation to educate other young people about the violence of abortion and the resources available to help pregnant and parenting students. In carrying out these activities, Students for Life relies on sidewalk counseling, that is, person-to-person contacts that include passing out literature and engaging in oral education and counseling. It carries out these activities in New York, so the challenged ordinance adversely affects its ability to convey a message of life. More generally, the courts’ continued reliance on Hill v. Colorado 530 U.S. 703 (2000), to the exclusion of McCullen v. Coakley 134 S. Ct. 2536 (2014), and Reed v. Town of Gilbert 135 S. Ct. 2281 (2015), pose a threat to Students for Life’s constitutionally protected interest in persuading pregnant students to carry their babies to term instead of aborting them and SFLA’s continued advocacy and guidance in the public square.

¹ Rule 37 statement: The parties were notified and consented to the filing of this brief more than 10 days before its filing. See Sup. Ct. R. 37.2(a). No party’s counsel authored any of this brief; amici alone funded its preparation and submission. See Sup. Ct. R. 37.6.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

As a lower court in the federal judicial system, the Second Circuit was obligated to follow Hill, which it saw as controlling. This case presents this Court with the opportunity to confront that incompatibility.

“[W]hile the First Amendment does not guarantee a speaker the right to any particular form of expression, some forms—such as normal conversation and leafletting on a public sidewalk—have historically been more closely associated with the transmission of ideas than others.” McCullen v. Coakley, 134 S. Ct. 2518, 2536 (2014). The Westchester ordinance substantially burdens both normal conversation and leafletting, just as the Massachusetts law was found to do in McCullen. The result in McCullen is attributable, at least in part, to the value it saw and gave to the peaceful and considerate way the McCullen Petitioners exercised their First Amendment rights. The Vitagliano Petitioner wants to do the same thing.

Hill’s conclusions regarding content and viewpoint discrimination cannot be reconciled with Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 135 S. Ct. 2281 (2015), and Matal v. Tam, 137 S. Ct. 1744 (2017), respectively. This Court should revisit Hill and conclude that the Westchester ordinance is an exercise in content discrimination, viewpoint discrimination, or both.

In addition, Hill undervalues the interests of the speakers and overweighs the interest of the listeners. The balance it strikes is inconsistent with the balance struck in McCullen, and so is its reasoning with respect to narrow tailoring.

ARGUMENT

I. This Court should overrule its decision in Hill v. Colorado because its rationale has been superseded.

Hill has not aged well. In the 23 years since Hill was decided, this Court has undercut its reasoning in three significant ways. First, its conclusions that the Colorado law at issue was content and viewpoint neutral are incorrect. Second, the Hill Court's reliance on "the significant difference between state restrictions on a speaker's right to address a willing audience and those that protect listeners from unwanted communication," see 530 U.S. at 714, is misplaced. Third, its treatment of narrow tailoring is flawed. In view of these problems with Hill, this Court should overrule it.

A. This Court's First Amendment jurisprudence since Hill has undermined its reasoning.

The Court's decisions since Hill have called into question that decision. Hill should be revisited to clarify First Amendment jurisprudence and provide consistent reasoning and application of the law. In both Hill and McCullen, the Court found that the ordinances at issue were neither content nor viewpoint based. However, in Reed v. Town of Gilbert, 135 S. Ct.

2218 (2015), the Court held that the town’s sign ordinance was content based on its face. Likewise, in Matal v. Tam, 137 S. Ct. 1744 (2017), the Court concluded that a federal law denying trademark protection to trademarks that “may ‘disparage . . . or bring . . .into contemp[t] or disrepute’ any ‘persons, living or dead,’ “offends a bedrock First Amendment principle: Speech may not be banned on the ground that it expresses ideas that offend.” Id. at 1751 (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1052(a)). In other words, the disparagement clause “constitutes [unconstitutional] viewpoint discrimination.” Id. at 1765 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment).

The Westchester ordinance should be subject to the same scrutiny that the Court gave to the Town of Gilbert’s sign ordinance and to the disparagement provision in federal statutory law.

1. Reed v. Town of Gilbert shows that the Westchester ordinance is a content-based restriction on speech.

In Reed v. Town of Gilbert, the Court held that the town’s sign ordinance was an unconstitutional content-based restriction of speech that violated the First Amendment. It explained that a law is content-based when it “applies to particular speech because of the topic discussed or the message expressed.” Id. at 2227. Laws that are content neutral on their face can still be an unconstitutional content-based restriction of speech if they “cannot be justified without reference to the content of the regulated speech” or were adopted “because of disagreement with the message the speech conveys.” Id. (quoting Ward v. Rock Against Racism, 491 U.S. 781, 791 (1989) (internal brackets omitted)).

Noting that it has “repeatedly considered whether a law is content neutral on its face before turning to the law’s justification or purpose,” id. at 2228, the Court concluded that the town’s sign ordinance was content based. It explained that the classification of signs, as, for example, “Temporary Directional Signs” or “Political Signs,” and the resulting limitations, “depend[ed] entirely on the communicative content of the sign.” Id. at 2227. The Court observed that “the church’s signs inviting people to attend its worship service are treated differently from signs conveying other types of ideas,” and therefore the ordinance was impermissibly content-based Id.

In the same way, the Westchester ordinance requires consideration of the content of Petitioner’s speech. How else could the authorities charged with enforcing the ordinance distinguish between a sidewalk counselor (illegal) and a panhandler, pollster, or a passerby who asks for the time (all legal) without considering the content of the communication. See McCullen, 134 S. Ct. at 2531-32 (“[T]he Act would not be content neutral if it were concerned with undesirable effects that arise from the direct impact of speech on its audience or listeners’ reactions to speech.”) (internal quotations omitted). Accordingly, the Westchester ordinance should be treated as a content-based restriction on speech.

2. Matal v. Tam shows that the Westchester ordinance mandates unconstitutional viewpoint discrimination.

The Westchester ordinance is an unconstitutional exercise in viewpoint discrimination. If a panhandler, a pollster, or a passerby who asks for the time can speak, but the sidewalk counselor cannot, the ordinance favors some viewpoints over others, which it cannot do constitutionally.

“[T]he test for viewpoint discrimination is whether—within the relevant subject category—the government has singled out a subset of messages for disfavor based on the views expressed.” Matal, 137 S. Ct. at 1766 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). As Justice Kennedy explained, “The danger of viewpoint discrimination is that the government is attempting to remove certain ideas or perspectives from a broader debate.” Id. at 1767.

In his opinion, Justice Alito observed that the disparagement clause, by “den[ying] registration to any mark that is offensive to a substantial percentage of the members of any group,” constituted viewpoint discrimination because “[g]iving offense is a viewpoint.” Matal, 137 S. Ct. at 1763 (Alito, J.). The effect of the disparagement clause was to allow the registration of “positive or benign” marks, but not “derogatory” ones. Id. at 1766; see also id. at 1765 (“[I]t is a happy-talk clause.”) (Alito, J.).

The Westchester ordinance does precisely the same thing. It singles out the message of the sidewalk counselor for disapproval. But, as Justice Kennedy pointed out, the First Amendment “protects the right to create and present arguments for particular positions in particular ways, as the speaker chooses. By mandating positivity, the law here might silence dissent and distort the marketplace of ideas.” Matal, 137 S. Ct. at 1767 (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment). The Westchester ordinance singles out speech that might oppose abortion. Westchester cannot constitutionally silence some viewpoints and allow others.

3. This Court should revisit its conclusions that the Colorado law in Hill and the Massachusetts law in McCullen are content and viewpoint neutral.

As acknowledged above, in both Hill and McCullen, the Court found that the laws in question were not either content or viewpoint based. In each case, though, those findings were addressed in dissent. Those dissents have become all the more persuasive given this Court’s more recent First Amendment decisions.

In McCullen, Justice Scalia, joined by Justices Kennedy and Thomas, dissented, concluding that the Massachusetts law was content-based for two reasons. First, he noted that the law “burden[ed] only the public spaces outside abortion clinics.” 134 S. Ct. at 2544 (Scalia, J., dissenting). He explained, “[s]howing that a law that suppresses speech on a specific subject is so far reaching that it applies even when the asserted non-speech-related problems are not present is persuasive evidence that the law is content based.” Id. at 2544-45. Second, the law gave a pass to the clinic employees and agents acting within the scope of their employment. As Justice Scalia rhetorically asked, “Is there any serious doubt that abortion clinic employees or agents ‘acting within the scope of their employment’ near clinic entrances may—indeed, often will—speak in favor of abortion.” Id. at 2546. Accordingly, he found the Massachusetts law to be “unconstitutional root and branch.” Id. at 2549.

In his McCullen dissent, Justice Alito found that the Massachusetts law discriminated on the basis of viewpoint. He noted, “[s]peech in favor of the clinic and its work by employees and agents is permitted; speech criticizing the clinic and its work is a crime. This is blatant viewpoint discrimination.” 134 S. Ct. at 2549 (Alito, J., dissenting).

Similarly, in Hill, Justice Scalia, joined by Justice Thomas, pointed out that a law like Colorado’s, which “operates only on speech that communicates a message of protest, education, or counseling,” presents the risk of “invidious thought-control.” 503 U.S. at 743-44 (Scalia, J., dissenting). “When applied, as it is here, at the entrance to medical facilities, it is a means of impeding speech against abortion.” Id. at 744. He concluded, “In sum, it blinks reality to regard this statute, in its application to oral communications, as anything other than a content-based restriction upon speech in the public forum.” Id. at 748.

Justice Kennedy also dissented, noting, “[f]or the first time, the Court approves a law which bars a private citizen from passing a message, in a peaceful manner and on a profound moral issue, to a fellow citizen on a public sidewalk.” 503 U.S. at 756 (Kennedy, J., dissenting). He observed that prohibitions against picketing or leafletting were content free, as was impeding access. In contrast, “Under the Colorado enactment, . . . the State must review content to determine whether a person has engaged in criminal ‘protest, education, or counseling.’” Id. at 766. Furthermore, by limiting the law’s reach to entrances to medical facilities, which is where the prohibited activity occurs, the law draws a line based on content. Id. at 767.

The analysis in these dissents parallels the Court’s holdings in Reed v. Town of Gilbert and Matal v. Tam. More to the point, the Court found that a Minnesota law that barred the wearing of a “political badge, political button, or other political insignia” inside a polling place on Election Day swept too broadly in suppressing speech to be narrowly tailored in protecting the State’s interest in protecting the right to vote. Minnesota Voters Alliance v. Mansky, 138 S. Ct. 1876 (2018). In addition, the Court has held that the First Amendment protected Westboro Baptist Church’s “hurtful” picketing at a soldier’s funeral from a state-law-based tort claim because, “[a]s a Nation we have chosen . . . to protect even hurtful speech on public issues to ensure that we do not stifle public debate.” Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443, 461 (2011). Put simply, free speech is widely protected, and it should be protected in Westchester.

Moreover, the Westchester ordinance, just like Colorado's law, burdens only the space outside abortion clinics and stifles only speech opposed to acts taken at such facilities. It represents the statutory creation of an eight-foot bubble near a 100-foot no-go zone "in which a particular group, which ha[s] broken no law, cannot exercise its rights of speech, assembly, and association." Madsen v. Women's Health Center, 512 U.S. 753, 785 (1994) (Scalia, J., dissenting). This Court should use this case to embrace the dissents in Hill and McCullen, invalidating the Westchester ordinance.

B. The Hill Court's balancing of interests has been superseded by McCullen.

This Court has made it clear that the First Amendment takes little account of the difference between willing and unwilling listeners. As Justice Alito wrote, "[w]e have said time and again that 'the public expression of ideas may not be prohibited just because the ideas are themselves offensive to some of their hearers.'" Matal v. Tam, 137 S. Ct. at 1763 (Alito, J.) (quoting Street v. New York, 394 U.S. 396 (1969) (collecting cases); see also id. at 1766 ("The Government may not insulate a law from charges of viewpoint discrimination by tying censorship to the reaction of the speaker's audience." (Kennedy, J., concurring in part and concurring in the judgment)). As Justice Kennedy explained, "a speech burden based on audience reactions is simply government hostility and intervention in a different guise." Id. at 1767.

That is, however, precisely what the Hill Court did: [a]llow the chilling of speech out of solicitude for “unwilling listeners.” 530 U.S. at 714. The court in Hill acknowledged, “[t]he right to free speech, of course, includes the right to attempt to persuade others to change their views, and may not be curtailed simply because the speaker’s message may be offensive to his audience.” Id. at 716. Yet, the Court went on to protect what it saw as “captive listeners.” Id. at 718. Indeed, it criticized the dissent for “appear[ing] to consider recognizing any of the interest of unwilling listeners—let alone balancing those interest against the rights of speakers—to be unconstitutional.” Id.

In McCullen, the Court took a far different approach to the balancing of interests. As it recognized, the McCullen petitioners did not engage in aggressive action, but rather in sidewalk counseling. The Court explained: “petitioners consider it essential to maintain a caring demeanor, a calm tone of voice, and direct eye contact during the[ir] exchanges.” 134 S. Ct. at 2527; see also id. at 2563 (“They seek not merely to express their opposition to abortion, but to inform women of various alternatives and to provide help in pursuing them. Petitioner believes that they can accomplish this objective only through personal, caring, consensual conversations.”). The buffer zone created by the Massachusetts law made it “substantially more difficult” to exercise their First Amendment rights.

The experience of Students for Life is consistent with the petitioners in McCullen. Through its Standing With You initiative, it seeks to make sure that pregnant and parenting students are empowered to choose life and to succeed. In 2022-23, through its work, Students for Life can document thirty-three instances in which a mother considering abortion chose instead to bear the child due to the influence and support of Students for Life, and it can point to dozens of mothers assisted with childcare, financial assistance, legal help, and parenting supplies.

Moreover, just as the McCullen Court emphasized the importance of one-on-one communication and leafletting, it refused to let Massachusetts dictate how they might exercise their First Amendment rights. It observed that the contention that the McCullen Petitioners could still engage in some forms of protest “miss[ed] the point.” 134 S. Ct. at 2536. As the Court noted, if all that the McCullen Petitioners could do was to raise their voices and be seen as “vociferous opponents of abortion, then the buffer zones have effectively stilled petitioners’ message.” Id. at 2537. Westchester, likewise, should not be allowed to tell Petitioner how she can exercise her First Amendment rights.

The experience of the McCullen Petitioners and Students for Life show that the Hill Court’s assumptions regarding unwilling listeners are overstated. Westchester should not be permitted to infringe on Petitioner’s First Amendment rights to protect the interest of putative unwilling listeners.

C. The Westchester ordinance is not narrowly tailored.

The Westchester ordinance has nine parts: one that suppresses speech, and eight others that criminalize obstructive conduct. The second part shows that the County has tools to control disruptive activity that do not depend on the suppression of speech. Accordingly, even if this Court chooses not to revisit its conclusion that speech restrictions like those in McCullen and Hill are content and viewpoint neutral, the Westchester ordinance remains suspect.

In McCullen, the Court explained, “[t]o meet the requirement of narrow tailoring, the government must demonstrate that alternative measures that burden substantially less speech would fail to achieve the government’s interests, not simply that the chosen route is easier.” 134 S. Ct. at 2540. As it noted, “[a] painted line on the sidewalk is easy to enforce, but the prime objective of the First Amendment is not efficiency.” Id.; see also Hill, 503 U.S. at 762 (“Prophylaxis is the antithesis of narrow tailoring.”) (Scalia, J., dissenting); NAACP v. Button, 371 U.S. 415, 438 (1963) (“Broad prophylactic rules in the area of free expression are suspect. . . . Precision of regulation must be the touchstone in an area touching our most precious freedoms.”).

Section 425.31(a-h) all vindicate Westchester County’s interest in keeping the peace, ensuring access to medical facilities, and otherwise prevent interference with their operation. Specifically, Section 425.31(a) prohibits any person from knowingly:

physically obstruct[ing] or block[ing] another person from entering into or exiting from the premises of a reproductive health care facility or a public parking lot serving a reproductive health care facility, in order to prevent that person from obtaining or rendering, or assisting in obtaining or rendering, medical treatment or reproductive health care services.²

The prohibition of “passing any material, item, or object to, displaying a sign to, or engaging in oral protest, education, or counseling,”³ each of which is a First Amendment-protected activity, is only tangentially related to Westchester County’s interest in assuring access to reproductive healthcare facilities.

In McCullen, the Court pointed to provisions like those subsections above as well as more general criminal laws “forbidding assault, breach of the peace, trespass, vandalism, and the like.” 134 S. Ct at 2538. These laws showed that Massachusetts “has available to it a variety of approaches that appear capable of serving its interests, without excluding individuals from areas historically open for speech and debate.” Id. at 2359. The Court also rejected the claim that those other approaches had not worked.

The Court’s approach to narrow tailoring in McCullen is far more rigorous than in Hill, where the Court explained, “A bright-line prophylactic approach may be the best way to provide protection, and at the same time, by offering clear guidance and avoiding subjectivity, to protect speech itself.” 503 U.S. at 729. As noted above, the prophylactic rationale was dismissed in McCullen, as well as by Justice Scalia in his Hill dissent. The Court also opined that, even as restricted, the law allowed for “adequate means of communication.” Id. In so doing, it minimized the burden on free speech. Compare McCullen, 134 S. Ct. at 2535 (noting that “the buffer zones impose serious burdens on petitioners’ speech.”). Indeed, the Court noted, “The Court of Appeals and respondents are wrong to downplay these burdens on petitioners’ speech.” Id. at 2536.

² Westchester Cnty., N.Y., Charter & Admin. Code § 425.31(a).

³ Westchester Cnty., N.Y., Charter & Admin. Code § 425.31(i).

The McCullen Court observed that “[t]he buffer zones burden substantially more speech than necessary to achieve the Commonwealth’s asserted interests.” Id. at 2357. As a result, the Commonwealth was required to show that it had not “too readily foregone options that could serve its interest just as well, without substantially burdening the kind of speech in which petitioners wish to engage.” Id. At the very least, the same burden should be imposed on the County of Westchester.

II. Stare decisis does not require this Court to adhere to Hill.

As demonstrated above, this Court’s decisions have shown Hill to be all but expressly overruled. Cf. McCullen, 134 S. Ct. at 2546 (“[T]he Court itself has sub silentio (and perhaps inadvertently) overruled Hill.”) (Scalia, J., dissenting.). This Court should take the last step.

Stare decisis is “not an inexorable command.” Pearson v. Callahan, 555 U.S. 223, 233 (2009). Indeed, it is “at its weakest when [the Court] interprets the Constitution because [its] interpretation can be altered only by constitutional amendment or by overruling . . . prior decisions. Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 235 (1997). Moreover, “stare decisis applies with perhaps least force of all to decisions that wrongly denied First Amendment rights.” Janus v. AFSCME, 138 S. Ct. 2448, 2478 (2018).

The Hill Court’s understanding of the First Amendment has been overtaken in several important ways. First, its conclusion that the Colorado law did not unconstitutionally discriminate on the basis of content or viewpoint is inconsistent with Reed v. Town of Gilbert and Matal v. Tam, respectively. The Hill Court’s balancing of the interests of speakers and listeners and its narrow tailoring conclusion cannot be reconciled with McCullen v. Coakley. Even if its reasoning were correct in the first instance, as to which there is substantial doubt, that is no longer the case.

Nonetheless, Hill continues to preclude legal challenges to the cookie cutter ordinances that it spawned. It blocked the lower courts in this case, and in other case. See Bruni v. City of Pittsburgh, 283 F. Supp. 357, 367 (W.D. Pa. 2017). Even though Hill’s reasoning has been superseded, only this Court can decide whether Hill can survive.

CONCLUSION

This Court should grant the petition for writ of certiorari and, on review, reverse the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM BOCK, III
Counsel of Record
KROGER GARDIS AND REGAS, LLP
111 Monument Circle Ste 900
Indianapolis, Indiana 46204
(317) 777-7412
wbock@kgrlaw.com

ZACHARY KESTER
General Counsel
STUDENTS FOR LIFE OF AMERICA
1000 Winchester Street, Suite 301
Fredericksburg, VA 22401
(463) 229-0240
zkester@studentsforlife.org

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

August 24, 2023